

ABSTRACT

Methods and systems for tracking features of a given device are provided. A representative method includes: collecting information regarding the intended use of a first feature of a device by a user; and providing information that corresponds to the device so that a first feature of the device exhibits a second mode of operation, provided the collected information indicates that the user intends to use the first feature, thereby enabling the functionality of the first feature. Systems, devices, and other methods are also provided.